

edge and affordable innovation. As he replayed the conversation in his mind, Koduru Ishwara Varaprasad Reddy wondered if after all, there had been a method to his madness. Would he be able to do it if he had to do it all over again now? Had his deep commitment to the value and idea made all the difference? He had been awarded the third highest civilian honour of the country, Padma Bhushan for making recombinant vaccines affordable, but what indeed was his legacy? An affordable vaccine, a company, an industrial sector or a method? His mind quickly darted back to where it all began.
